One thing that I looked for was a discussion of the use of a moratorium on debt service in times of crisis, to allow time for an adequate process to be organized and to minimize the social impacts within the affected country. I think the first use of a moratorium was for Honduras following Hurricane Mitch in 1998. A similar process was used for Liberia, in recognition of its extremely frail post-conflict situation. Here in Canada, the government placed a moratorium on all bilateral debts by HIPC countries plus Bangladesh, which remained in place until HIPC Completion Point, when the debts were cancelled.
